Splashing in Puddles

BRRRIIIING! The alarm clock rings, waking Tim for school. Time to get up! He sits up, looks outside, and sighs. What a gray, rainy day. Dark clouds cover the sky, hiding the sun. There has been a lot of rain this spring. Too much rain. Tim can’t wait for summer.

Tim wheels into the middle of a deep puddle. He puts the swim fins on his hands rather than his feet. The fins are long enough for Tim to reach the puddle. Tim uses the fins to splash since he can’t use his feet. It’s unusual, but it works! There’s nothing more fun for a kid than splashing in puddles!

He watches the puddles forming outside as he eats.

Some of those puddles are big enough to swim in, Tim thinks. He wants to go splash in some of those puddles and climb into his wheelchair. He takes his sister’s swim fins from the closet, puts on his raincoat, and goes outside. He watches the alarm clock rings, waking Tim for school. Time to get up! He sits up, looks outside, and sighs. What a gray, rainy day. Dark clouds cover the sky, hiding the sun. There has been a lot of rain this spring. Too much rain. Tim can’t wait for summer.

Tim wheels into the middle of a deep puddle. He puts the swim fins on his hands rather than his feet. The fins are long enough for Tim to reach the puddle. Tim uses the fins to splash since he can’t use his feet. It’s unusual, but it works! There’s nothing more fun for a kid than splashing in puddles!

Tim gets dressed and climbs into his wheelchair. He rolls into the bathroom to wash up. Then he heads to the kitchen for breakfast. His mom and dad are getting ready for work. But his sister is already at the table eating some cereal. Tim makes some toast and goes to the table. He watches the alarm clock rings, waking Tim for school. Time to get up! He sits up, looks outside, and sighs. What a gray, rainy day. Dark clouds cover the sky, hiding the sun. There has been a lot of rain this spring. Too much rain. Tim can’t wait for summer.

He watches the puddles forming outside as he eats.

Some of those puddles are big enough to swim in, Tim thinks. He wants to go splash in some of those puddles and climb into his wheelchair. He takes his sister’s swim fins from the closet, puts on his raincoat, and goes outside. He watches the alarm clock rings, waking Tim for school. Time to get up! He sits up, looks outside, and sighs. What a gray, rainy day. Dark clouds cover the sky, hiding the sun. There has been a lot of rain this spring. Too much rain. Tim can’t wait for summer.