The Whispering Shadows

A group of friends—Eric, Jenna, Marcus, and Olivia—sat around a crackling campfire, deep in the woods. The night was still, too still. No crickets. No rustling leaves. Just the eerie silence that made their skin crawl.

They told scary stories, laughing to shake off their nerves, but every so often, the wind carried whispers through the trees. “Just the wind,” Jenna said, pulling her hoodie tighter.

But deep inside, none of them believed it. As they settled into their sleeping bags, Eric suddenly sat up straight, eyes wide. “Did you hear that?” he whispered.

Everyone froze.

The fire had burned low, casting long, twisting shadows around the clearing. Then, from the darkness beyond the firelight, they all heard it. A voice. Soft, but clear.

“Let me in...”

Jenna's breath hitched. Marcus grabbed his flashlight and shone it into the trees. Nothing. Just endless blackness.

“Who's there?” Olivia called out, her voice shaking. No answer. Just the crackling embers.

Then, from right behind them, the whisper came again—so close, it sent a chill down their spines.

“I'm already here.”

They screamed.

Eric spun, shining his flashlight in all directions. The trees were empty. But as he turned back toward his friends, Jenna gasped.

There were footprints in the dirt.

Circling them.

And worst of all?

They weren't their own.
